In Japan, manga cafés can be found everywhere. With a key, you can get a small room that is just big enough for a chair, a small desk, and a person. People in a manga café have to be quiet, so they won’t disturb others.

Some people in Japan choose to live in a manga café to save money on expensive apartment rent. Many manga cafés are open 24 hours and have shower rooms, so it’s a good choice for living in a manga café. People living in manga cafés usually have homes, but their homes are often hours away from their workplaces. By living in manga cafés, they don’t need to spend hours in traffic every day, and it’s also cheaper.

A manga café may not be as comfortable as a home, but for those who like comic books, it is a dream come true.

Dear Maggie,

How’s everything going?

School has just started here. It’s my third year in the USA. Last summer, I had a chance to meet different people as an intern. My school believed students should help others besides studying. That’s why I worked in a hospital. I didn’t get paid for the work, so at first I thought I was helping others. But later I found I was actually helping myself. The work has changed me in a good way. I cared only about my studies before, but now I’m different. It makes me feel happy to see others live better lives because of something I can do for them.

I’m graduating and going back home next summer. Let’s visit our high school teacher, Ms. Wang, then. She’s expecting to have her first baby in September.

All the best wishes,
Amy
