A young native Indian brought the immigrants food and taught them to grow plants and other things. The next year, the immigrants gave a big dinner to celebrate the harvest and thank the native Indians for their help. In fact, the native Indians brought more food to share with them. It showed the friendship between them.

However, the later new immigrants forgot the help of the native Indians and began to kill the native Indians and sold them. Today, Thanksgiving is a holiday all over America. However, many Indians don't celebrate it because it still hurts in their hearts. How could native Indians forget the terrible past?
