(E)閱讀測驗 (10%)

(a)

A 19-year-old London girl is selling her bath water. It is so popular that the water has sold out—with all 500 bottles in just two days. She is Instagram cosplay model Belle Delphine with over four million followers across social media. She posted a video to her Instagram page advertising small bottles of her old bath water for $30. In the video she winks at the camera and lets water from her mouth drip into a small bottle.

Bella calls herself Gamer Girl. She has become popular on social media by sitting in a bathtub filled with water in short clothes. Selling her old bath water is her latest idea to make money from her followers. Another way she makes money is by selling selfies of herself. Followers can pay $2,500 for some of the selfies. She wants more “strange ideas” to make money. However, not everyone likes the bath water idea—some people call it “gross”. An Instagram user said the world is going crazy. Others think she has excellent business skills.

A man in Mumbai, India is unhappy that he was born. He is suing his parents because they did not ask him if he wanted to be born. Raphael Samuel, 27, is suing his parents for giving birth to him without his permission. He is an anti-natalist—someone who believes in anti-natalism, which puts a negative value on birth. Anti-natalists believe people should try not to have children. They believe that having children is wrong and that the world is a better place with fewer children.

Raphael Samuel posted a video on YouTube about suing his parents and it has gone viral. In the video, he answers questions from his followers. He wants everyone in India and the world to understand they were born without their permission and they do not owe their parents anything; what’s more, their parents should also pay them to live. He said, “I love my parents, but they had me for their joy.” Samuel’s mother said she would agree with her son but he must show her how she could have asked for his permission to be born.
