The Internet has become an important part of your life. Be sure to stay safe online. Here are some useful tips.

1.

Never give out your phone number or home address to strangers you meet online. If you do, you might get yourself into trouble.

2.

Keep your password safe. It is not safe to use weak passwords like your name, your phone number, or your birth date. Use stronger passwords, and they should have at least eight characters. For example, “#As12Sf35JH56K*” has a special character at both ends. It is better to change your password at least every 90 days.

3.

Be careful with what you post online. Think twice before uploading posts or pictures because they may be copied, downloaded, or shared. Once you post them, they will stay on the Internet for all time.

4.

Be cautious of the people you meet online because you don’t know them in the real world. What they say might not be true. They might cheat about their ages or jobs. If you find there is something wrong with a person, block him or her right away. For your own safety, don’t date with someone you have met online.

5.

Be nice and polite to people online. Think before you comment. Don’t say or do anything that might hurt others’ feelings. Always remember, what is done cannot be undone.

UNC News

Air pollution is getting serious in almost every part of the world. Buses and cars are running on gas, and this makes the problem worse. Because of the dirty air, lots of people get sick or even die. Something must be done to solve the problem before it is too late.

In some countries, the buses are trying to use biofuel. Take the UK for example. In London, a new kind of biofuel is made from coffee waste. It is used to power some of the city’s buses. The following is how the biofuel is made.

Using coffee oil to make biofuel is a clever idea. The reason is when people drink coffee, there will always be coffee waste. A study shows that people in London drink about 5.5 million cups of coffee every day. Besides, buses run on such biofuel are more friendly to the Earth than those which use gas.

In London and other big cities around the world, the air is already dangerous for people with poor health. We must do something to it. It’s never too late to take action. Clean fuels, like coffee oil, may widely be used to fix the air problem in the future. This way, it would make our living places better.

People now have a new choice about what to do while being free—listen to Podcasts.

With Podcasts, you can hear about different ideas or stories. One special Podcast is Ologies with Alie Ward by Alie Ward. She talks to people with different jobs we usually don't know. With her easy and fun questions, we get to hear about special jobs and what they do every day. Here are what two students said after listening to different episodes.

Katherine:

My favorite episode from Ologies with Alie Ward is about “cosmetology”. In this episode, Alysha Marcantonio shares with us what she does. To become a cosmetologist, she has to go through hard training. She now does makeup, different hair styles, and skin care for both men and women. I always think makeup is fun. Maybe I can be a cosmetologist one day!

Jasmine:

I love what Dr. Philippa Ribbink shared on the “gynecology” episode. She believes that being a doctor, she can be a part of a person's life story, and helping people is a wonderful feeling to her. To me, gynecology is interesting. It is about women's health, and it helps me to know myself better. If I study gynecology one day, I will do all I can to care for women, not only for their bodies but also their feelings.
